The Dish

There's much to choose from at this newly opened spot that presents beautiful renditions of Japanese food, including eye-catching sushi and a wide array of Thai specialties. The best values are either the Japanese lunch box specials ($9-$15) or something from the Thai lunch menu ($9-$11). I visited too late for lunch deals, but I really wanted Pad Thai, so I bit the bullet and ordered from the regular dinner menu, spending $14 for an order of the classic noodle dish with the addition of shrimp. It's also available with chicken ($13) or assorted seafood ($16). The dish is made to order, which means your food is so hot that touching the foil container is hazardous. It's good it has time to cool on the trip home.

You dig into a pleasant enough rendition that includes medium shrimp (I counted nine), scallions, fresh bean sprouts, ground peanuts, egg and rice noodles stir fried with the Thai fish-sauce based mixture that gives this dish its wonderful flavors. And, if you happen to be taking out for kids, there's a children's menu ($8-$10) that lists katsu, a couple of teriyakis and kid-friendly sushi, including a crab roll, tamago roll and a cucumber roll.
